GRAVE-DIGGERS' TRIALS.

Calvary Employees Will Appeal to the Archbishop. LONG ISLAND CITY, June 3.-The grave-diggers and teamsters employed in Calvary Cemetery met last night at Laurel Hill and organized a union and to devise some means to prevent a prospective reduction in wages.

The men have also a grievance against Timekeeper Ryan. They say he is a regular autocrat; that he fined Patrick O'Burn two days pay because he rested for minutes after digring a grave 5 for minutes after digring a grave 5 street. few minutes after digging a grave 9 a few minutes after digging a grave 5 feet deep. They say Ryan dismissed Hugh Clark, another grave-digger, because he drank a glass of beer with his dinner. John Hart, who was the first foreman in Calvary, it is alleged, was fined one-half day's pay by Ryan because he did not hurry up to work. Hart, who is seventy years of age, was offered a pension by the trustees, but said he would rather work. It was decided to present the grievances to Archbishop Corrigan, Chairmand of the Board of Trustees of the Cemeter, and ask him for the removal of Ryar The men will also ask the Archbishop to prevent their wages being reduced.
